Working closely with Polymedia PR, the existing Drupal 6 Sandy Balls website needed modernising. The site required much work, creating new content-types, using new modules, editing existing modules in PHP, total site-wide restyling.

The website was worked on from start to finish involving all aspects of Drupal development as well as giving advice on server-side issues.

As I'm getting more and more involved in Drupal development it made sense to re-create my site in Drupal 7. The site is an on going project and is yet to be finished. The site so far has individual pages, a gallery that utilises the Views_slideshow module, a blog and a contact form. I am currently working on the portfolio and an interactive CV. The site is not live yet.

Photography

One of my hobbies is photography. I can't really categorise what type of photographer I am, as I think it changes to the situation you are in. The one thing I know is that I prefer artistic photography. I try to give myself tasks and limits when I go out. As well digital photography I also still like to use film when I can.

Here you can view a selection of my photographs and if you like them you can view more on my flickr site.

Capital of London

Again working closely with Phil Linnell of Philth design, we are currently at the initiation stage of a project that will involve a complete re-design of an existing un-finished dynamic website. The site will be migrated to Drupal 7 to allow easy content management and will feature e-commerce functionalities and a business card customisation system.

Android Development

French Number Plates (Android App)

This was my first Android Mobile application(App). Developed in the official Android SDK which is based on the Java programming language. The main technologies used in this app are LayeredDrawables, for stacking images up. ListViews, sharedPreferences and time classes.

French Number Plates is a game played by thousands of people travelling through France. The aim of the game is to spot the numbers on the French number plates that correspond to the department that the car is registered in. Eventually you will have found them all.

Sim Racing News (Android app)

This was my second Android Mobile application(App). Developed in the official Android SDK which is based on the Java programming language. So therefore a bit more complicated. The main technologies used in this app are DOM Document Object Model and the inbuiltSQL database SQLite3. Other technologies used are InputStream and WebView.

I'm a big fan of PC racing games. It has a big online community with some useful news feeds. I decided to make an app that takes these feeds and puts them into one app. It also allows you to send an email reminder of the mods you are interested in for later downloading. I am proud to say it won App of the week at www.racesimcentral.com
